

Volunteer Abroad Services Unveils New Destination Online

Volunteering Abroad has become the newest form of overseas travel. Institute of Field Research Expeditions' (IFRE) site launch comes just in time to satisfy the growing demand for volunteer travel.

July 25, 2007 (FPRC) -- Volunteering Abroad has become the newest form of overseas travel. Institute of Field Research Expeditions' (IFRE) site launch comes just in time to satisfy the growing demand among the youngest segment of the population for volunteer opportunities to popular destinations in Africa and Latin America. Increase awareness of global issues and globalization trends has just fueled the demand even further.

Volunteer abroad services provider, Institute of Field Research Expeditions (www.ifrevolunteers.org) is a non profit organization dedicated to organizing and facilitating volunteer opportunities in many countries around the world.

Institute of Field Research Expeditions (IFRE) focuses on, "Volunteer abroad work opportunities in Africa, Latin America with popular destinations like Kenya and Costa Rica satisfies US thirst for cross cultural and global travel," says Murali Adhikary CEO of partner/affiliate Global Crossroad LLC (<http://www.globalcrossroad.com>). In the post September 11th era, US youth in particular has realized the value of volunteering abroad as a mean of exploring, learning, and gaining cross cultural exposure and both internet portals satisfy that need as well as adding value to the travel experience as an affordable and quality service provider.

IFRE is committed to matching third world countries to volunteers with its established relationships with local orphanages, non profit organizations (NGOs), and local governments. This network of established travel and volunteering experts has made IFRE's site the most trusted source for one in a lifetime volunteer abroad opportunity.

IFRE's Mission is to: Offer meaningful overseas volunteer opportunities and to seek sustainable solutions for education, health, conservation efforts and development issues through international volunteering.

IFRE has also added a full array of activities to satisfy all needs for volunteering abroad such as work in orphanages, internship programs, teaching English overseas, health projects and environmental conservation efforts.

For additional information visit the Institute of Field Research Expeditions website:

About Institute of Field Research Expeditions:

Founded in 2005, the Institute of Field Research Expeditions has been, with its partner www.globalcrossroad.com site the leader in Volunteer Abroad opportunities

Contact Information

For more information contact Alex Landin of Institute of Field Research Expeditions (<http://www.ifrevolunteers.org>)
(800) 675-2504

Keywords

Volunteer Abroad

Volunteering Abroad

volunteering opportunities

You can read this press release online here