September 16, 2007 (FPRC) --

We are pleased to announce the latest GMAT practice test software offered by Educational Software Technologies. The company is proud to offer this release and is pleased to announce that a new site design is just around the corner. The company is offering new software programs, flash cards, and word lists to help students prepare for tests. The new GMAT practice test software is perfect for those who want a lower cost alternative than Kaplan and other brand name test prep companies.

Educational Software Technologies serves a global market and helps students with a variety of training flash cards and software programs. All of this is done at a reasonable price that will not break a student's bank account. The company has a GRE Mock Test for individuals to take right before their exams and a variety of other products that make practicing for an important test a breeze. GMAT practice software is another specialty of this company. All of their products are available to order online and for immediate shipment. Keep reading or visit their website for more information.

Another area the company specializes in is TOEFL IBT Software for prep and practice before the main test. Obviously, study for a test is not a guaranteed way to achieve a higher score, but the company strives to provide the tools needed help a student studying. They have a strong devotion to providing excellent customer support to their customers even after the sale. So it is easy to buy their products with confidence. Other products the sold include wordlist flashcards and workbooks. To learn more about the GRE wordlist along with their other test prep programs please take the time to visit the company's website.
