

Luxury Air Jets meets with the US Department of Transportation on Capitol Hill

As a member in the National Defense Transportation Association (NDTA), Luxury Air Jets took part in an important initiative of meeting with the US government this week in Washington DC.

September 20, 2007 (FPRC) -- As a member in the National Defense Transportation Association (NDTA), Luxury Air Jets took part in an important initiative of meeting with the US government this week in Washington DC. Other member corporations such as Boeing, Northrop Grumman, AMTRAK, and FedEx that attended this meeting, are all joining the effort to foster partnership between government, military, and industry. This effort is designed to maintain a strong and efficient global transportation and distribution system in support of national security.

One of the main topics on the agenda was the National Transportation Week (NTW) which took place in Detroit, May 13-19, 2007; its purpose and scope. One of the events in the NTW was a business breakfast with a panel of leading transportation experts and local officials discussed how technological advancements are reshaping all sectors of the transportation industry as we know it.

Luxury Air Jets, represented by Gadi Capela of Client Relations, is in the opinion that there a lot of room for cooperation between the government and the private industry. The government should provide the framework and ground rules within which the private industry should operate, and in return, the private industry would provide the government with a profit-making model. Additionally, Rodney would like to encourage business executives to visit Luxury Air Jets website's at <http://www.luxuryairjets.com> for more information about private jet charter.

Rodney Kadymir, Luxury Air Jets' Managing Director, is developing a business plan that will propose a unique way which will be safe, time-saving, and cost-effective for government officials and corporate executives to use private jet charter services to transport themselves and their staff from place to place. "We are hoping to complete it soon so we can present it at the 61st NDTA Forum & Expo in Charleston, SC on September 15-19, 2007.", says Rodney.
