

Collectibles News Site Seeking Small, Medium and Large Dealers

Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News is seeking out small, medium and large dealers/retailers who are interested in contributing articles or press releases for free to promote their businesses. Whether you are an antiques and collectibles dealer, appraiser, association, museum or auctioneer, publishing your articles and/or press releases on Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News will be absolutely free.

November 4, 2007 (FPRC) -- Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News has quickly risen to the top on the major search engines for quality news by world renowned authors and contributors like: Antiques Roadshow, National Auctioneers Association, Smithsonian Museums, Olympia Antiques, The Louvre, Metropolitan Museum, Museum Victoria, National Knife Collectors Association, and many more. Now the owners of Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News would like to give back to the antiques and collectibles community that has been so generous to them by offering free article and press releases to those in related areas of business.

Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News is actively seeking out small, medium and large dealers/retailers and others who are interested in contributing articles or press releases which would be published for free to promote their businesses. These articles would be physically located on the Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News website at <http://antiques-collectibles-auction-news.com> as well as distributed via RSS news feeds to 250+ other news locations.

Whether you are an antiques and collectibles dealer, appraiser, association, museum or auctioneer, publishing your approved articles and/or press releases on Antiques, Collectibles and Auction News will be absolutely free! This could give you more links for the search engines along with increasing potential page views, visits and possibly purchases through your website.

Of course all articles and press releases must be relevant and approved prior to publishing.
