

"The Sand Creek Massacre" Nominated for Best Native American Film

Award-winning Sand Creek Massacre film nominated for best Native American film

November 15, 2007 (FPRC) -- "The Sand Creek Massacre", an award-winning (American Indian Film Festival, The Indie Gathering Film Festival) documentary film driven by Southern Cheyenne and Arapaho people who tell their version about what happened during the Sand Creek Massacre, has been nominated for Best Native American Film by the Trail Dust Film Festival Judging and Selections Committee and has been deemed worthy of a Golden Drover Award

Award Winners will be announced January 13th, 2008 at the Trail Dust Film Festival in Duncan, Oklahoma ( www.traildancefilmfestival.com).

Donald L. Vasicek, award-winning writer/filmmaker of Olympus Films+, LLC and producer of "The Sand Creek Massacre", said, "Each time this film receives exposure, it makes the Cheyenne and Arapaho people's voices that much more eloquent. The injustice they experienced at Sand Creek, not to mention the racism/genocide attitude that continues to stalk them in present day America, perpetuates their suppression as a culture and as a people. It is past due time for America to take care of their native people. The world should wait. We have our fences to mend to first, then we can better help others."
