

AEX Business Finance Advisory Report for Online Business Loan and Commercial Mortgage Applications

AEX Commercial Financing Group has issued a business finance advisory report outlining precautions to take with online business loan and business cash advance applications.

November 19, 2007 (FPRC) --

AEX Commercial Financing Group (AEX) has issued a Special Advisory Report outlining precautions to take with online business finance and commercial mortgage applications. The AEX Report is likely to be informative for many commercial borrowers and is provided to help business owners avoid business loan problems encountered when submitting an online request.

According to Stephen Bush, Chief Executive Officer for AEX Commercial Financing Group, "It is critical for business owners to understand why it is not in their best interest to use an online application and how they should proceed in their search for appropriate business financing and credit card processing. Commercial borrowers should not be surprised to discover that many lenders will provide an online commercial loan application. This timely AEX Special Report describes how and why to avoid the online business loan and commercial real estate loan application trap."

As noted in the AEX Report, business owners should be especially alert for using an online application approach for credit card processing and business cash advance programs. The use of an online business financing application is also commonly found at commercial real estate investment property financing websites. AEX Commercial Financing Group has built a solid reputation based upon effective and straightforward advice for avoiding business loan problems and has published some specific guidelines to assist commercial borrowers in avoiding additional critical business finance difficulties.

AEX Commercial Financing Group is based in Ohio and provides specialized commercial loan services, business opportunity investment financing, SBA loan programs and business cash advance help throughout the United States. Please visit AEX websites for more information or contact AEX directly for candid and practical business loan solutions.
