

New Document Tracking Service – a Tool No Business Should Be Without

A new document tracking service has just been launched. This tool, which provides detailed document usage statistics, allows businesses to track clients, see which documents were read (and by whom), improve security of their documents, and to see how their documents are being used overall. The service is proving to be a tool that no business should be without!

October 10, 2008 (FPRC) -- In our world of electronic documents, email, and shared information it is the businesses who capitalize on the tools available to them to protect their electronic assets and to improve their products and services that will excel in a technologically advanced market place. A new document tracking service is providing those businesses with the tools they need to improve their documents, track their clients, and to improve document security overall.

The service, provided by DocTracking.com, allows anyone to invisibly track a document and get a detailed analysis of how that document was used, and by whom. As a tool, this new service is proving to be invaluable to many businesses.

The system provides an easy way for businesses to attach tracking code to their Word Documents, Spreadsheets, PDF files, and PowerPoint Presentations. The tracking code is invisible to the end user, and is advanced enough to slip through any firewall unnoticed.

Each time the tracked document is opened; usage statistics are collected. The document owner can then login and see details of their document usage statistics that include: when the document was opened, who opened it, how long it was opened and which pages were read, which pages were printed, and more.

The statistics give DocTracking.com's customers an easy way to track clients, ensure invoices were read, track contracts and other legal documents, see who opened their confidential files, and overall to improve document security and effectiveness. Those statistics also give businesses a way to improve their documents, and to ensure their confidential information stays, that way by always knowing how their files were used.

As a tool, detailed document usage statistics really are something that no business should be without. They give corporations an edge in an exceedingly-advanced marketplace.
