November 3, 2008 (FPRC) -- Anthony Richardson - OverVoice, a leading British professional voice over artist specialising in cost effective, Received Pronunciation (accent-free), voice overs for film, television, radio, animation and audiobooks launches re-designed website including new sound reels with embedded MP3 player, updated testimonials, great new graphics and a controversial Blog.

The site was created exclusively by designer Keith McKinley of Orchid Information Systems using the latest Microsoft .aspx technology.

The New audio reels were developed and produced courtesy of Lee Pritchard of Media Music now.

Speaking at the Central London launch party Anthony Richardson commented: 'Keith has done a fantastic job in re-designing the OverVoice website and has stayed remarkably close to the original briefing document which required a 'cartoon retro' feel. The new look really shows off my work to its best advantage, and Keith's fantastic creativity.'

Keith McKinley of Orchid Information Systems said: 'Anthony is always easy to work with and it was a pleasure to be involved in this project. Fortunately cost was not an objective and the end result has borne-out the extensive investment made in the project.'

Among others, the new Anthony Richardson – OverVoice website highlights sound clips from projects such as audio books, TV and radio commercials, cartoon voices, celebrity impersonations and projects for companies such as Microsoft and Pepsi.
