

Business Finance Funding Practices Evaluated in The Working Capital Journal

AEX Commercial Financing Group has established a special section of The Working Capital Journal for ongoing evaluation of the rapidly-changing environment for business finance funding. The Working Capital Journal is now providing coverage which details how recent commercial loan and working capital financing decisions by commercial lenders will impact small business owners throughout the United States.

January 7, 2009 (FPRC) --

The Working Capital Journal published by AEX Commercial Financing Group has created a new special section devoted to ongoing coverage of recent changes which will impact business finance funding throughout the United States. AEX plans to analyze business lending actions and periodically update their findings in The Working Capital Journal in order to alert business owners about the substantial future changes which are expected for most commercial real estate loans and working capital loans.

According to Stephen Bush, Founder and Chief Executive Officer for AEX Commercial Financing Group, "We continue to project that the rapidly-changing environment for commercial loans and working capital financing throughout the United States will involve a series of new but avoidable problems for business owners. AEX plans to continue their prominent commercial finance funding role in helping commercial borrowers to understand what is happening and what to do about it. For example, we will be highlighting the most questionable commercial lending practices in The Working Capital Journal."

In order to provide a representative portrait of shifting lender practices, AEX is requesting that business owners and their advisors contact them to report commercial lender experiences which might be of interest to commercial borrowers throughout the United States. For other recent business financing comments by AEX, please refer to the Working Capital Journal.

Detailed information is available at AEX websites regarding their services. Please contact Stephen Bush at AEX to obtain individualized and candid business finance funding advice. AEX Commercial Financing Group is based in Ohio and provides specialized help for business cash advances, commercial loans and commercial real estate financing throughout the United States.
