AEX Commercial Financing Group has published a business finance survival guide which describes ethical and legal guerrilla finance tactics used by business owners to obtain commercial loans and working capital financing. The AEX small business loan survival guide is designed to give commercial borrowers effective strategies for responding to the recent turmoil in commercial credit markets.

June 15, 2009 (FPRC) --

A business finance and working capital finance survival guide for business owners seeking alternative commercial loan solutions has been published by AEX Commercial Financing Group. The AEX specialized business loan strategies are based entirely on legal and ethical financing techniques and are referred to as guerrilla loan tactics because of the practical need for borrowers to pursue more advanced measures in order to successfully obtain business financing and working capital loans in the current extreme lending conditions.

Three of the guerrilla loan tactics analyzed by AEX in their business financing survival guide are (1) Specialized options for working capital funding; (2) Be prepared to fire your banker and your bank; and (3) Determine whether your bank is a good bank or a bad bank. All of the guerrilla financing strategies described by AEX are designed to help business owners deal effectively and quickly with the harsh reality that many commercial lending programs are not functioning normally at the present time.

According to Stephen Bush, Founder and Chief Executive Officer for AEX Commercial Financing Group, "The guerrilla financing techniques evaluated by AEX are both ethical and legal, and commercial borrowers should not hesitate to do whatever it takes for their business to survive in the current depressed lending climate. Our suggestions for adopting guerrilla loan tactics should be aggressively used by most small business owners in the early stages of their commercial finance efforts because many individual banks are not providing a normal level of working capital management help and commercial funding."

Business owners and their advisors are encouraged to contact Stephen Bush at AEX to obtain help with small business loans and business consulting.
