

New UKMoney.tv Social Networking Site Empowers Users With Knowledge On UK Property, Finance And More

UKMoney.tv, a website devoted to everything related to UK money, launches its new social networking site. The site aims to help users learn about UK property, insurance, banking and everything else related to finances.

September 15, 2009 (FPRC) -- LONDON, ENGLAND - UKMoney.tv, a social networking site dedicated to all financial matters in the United Kingdom, announces it has launched its new website. The site is designed to help people learn about everything related to insurance, finances, investing and properties.

Users can talk about money matters such as careers and jobs in the financial sector, tax and tax havens, debt repayment, banking, hedge funds, credit and debit cards, which savings accounts will maximize returns, mortgages and other loan information. Additionally, users can flush out unscrupulous money making schemes, learn how to avoid money laundering through identity theft and research the best UK insurance company for their needs.

"There are hundreds of sites that talk about financial matters. What makes us different is that we're completely dedicated to products, properties and advice located within the United Kingdom. Our users can analyze, discuss and review every aspect of any financial product or service in the UK, without feeling pressured to purchase a specific product or being inundated by adverts. We're not here to sell you something - we're just here to help," said Mr. Frederick Johnson of UKMoney.tv.

Since the site's launch, users have added valuable information related to UK property, including an article outlining the popularity of a new UK commercial property fund. James Caan, one of the stars of the BBC's hit show, Dragons' Den, has agreed to act as the fund's investment adviser, lending credibility and excitement to the property fund. Dragons' Den is the inspiration for the US television show, The Shark Tank.

Additionally, another of the site's members recently posted a blog about how the UK prime minister and the Financial Services Authority should deal with bankers' pay, bonuses and the collapse of some of the country's most prominent banks.

"The fact that our users set the tone for our content is just another way we're one of the most useful and unique UK money websites. If you're interested in finding out which bank offers you the features you're looking for, want to know which utility company will provide you with the best service and rates, or need to know the best legal way to protect your money with accounts on the Isle of Man, Jersey or Guernsey look no further than UKMoney.tv. Our forum is growing every day and new content is frequently added by our users, making our site user driven. We're well on our way to becoming one of the most popular UK financial websites," said Johnson.
