

Health Care Hiring Joins SimplyHired Job Network

Health Care Hiring, the largest health and medical career website, has joined forces with SimplyHired, the largest job search engine on the web, to offer millions of jobs to job seekers in the healthcare sector, and to give health and medical employers access to job posting services across thousands of major websites worldwide.

October 2, 2009 (FPRC) -- Seattle, WA. Health Care Hiring at www.healthcarehiring.com recently announced that they have formed a strategic partnership with SimplyHired, a job search engine company with the largest online job database on the planet. The SimplyHired/Jobamatic network includes such major web destinations as CNet, TechCrunch, Webpronews, ZDNet, Perl.com, Fox News and About.com. Jobs posted on Health Care Hiring are distributed throughout the network.

Health Care Hiring recently launched a site-wide upgrade and database renewal project. For the past 8 years, the site has given job-seekers access to jobs and to contact information for health providers nationwide. The new, expanded project includes the NPI (National Provider Identifier) federal database of registered Medicare providers, updated monthly, plus legacy UPIN and Medicare data for physicians, hospitals, dialysis clinics, nursing homes and home health agencies, as well as contact information for health and medical providers nationwide, a total of 5.5 million listings.

With the U.S. jobless rate approaching 10%, healthcare jobs have become a critical focal point for any job seeker. Health care and medical occupations are among the fastest growing employment sectors, and will be adding millions of new jobs over the next several years. Healthcare and medical providers also create many jobs that are not specifically health related, such as administrative and technical positions. There is no recession or job shortage in health and medical care, which include about 15% of all employment nationally.

Many entry-level positions may be found, particularly in hospitals, nursing homes and home health agencies. Health care job resources are also an essential search focus for recent immigrants, who are learning English as a second language, and who are seeking entry-level jobs which provide on-the-job training.

About Health Care Hiring:

Health Care Hiring is a comprehensive career and employment website for the health care sector, offering job seekers access to millions of health care jobs across the U.S. Employers and recruiters may search resumes free and post jobs ($30 for 30 days) across a nationwide job network on thousands of websites that include exposure on Jobamatic, LinkedIn, MySpace, CNet, ZDNet and Fox News. Health Care Hiring also includes contact information for 5.5 million health care providers nationwide, where job seekers may search for jobs close to home. The staff of Health Care Hiring believe that their efforts can help play a small part in the larger effort to improve, revitalize and redesign the delivery of health care to all Americans.
