

Army.net Announces New Army Enlistment Benefits Presentation

Leading U.S. Army website, Army.net, has announced the launch of a new presentation to give soldiers and their dependents an idea of the many benefits the U.S. Army offers its employees.

December 14, 2009 (FPRC) -- LA QUINTA, CA – Army.net's latest presentation is designed to give Army soldiers and new recruits a concise but comprehensive idea of the many benefits the U.S. Army offers its soldiers. With a self-explanatory title, 'A Detailed Look At The Benefits Of Army Enlistment' slideshow gives Army personnel a good idea of what extra perks they can expect from their career in the Army.

Army.net is a leading Army jobs and career opportunities website that acts as an invaluable resource for the U.S. Army. The site gives tips on how to enlist in the military, what to expect from basic Army training and other pertinent information about the Army. The website works hard to provide current and prospective Army soldiers and employees with useful and relevant information that is likely to come in handy for their Army career. The new Army enlistment benefits presentation is yet another way in which Army.net is providing soldiers and their dependents with need-to-know information about the advantages of enlisting in the Army.

"Very often people shy away from enlisting in the Army because it is a huge commitment for just a job. But unlike other jobs and career options, the U.S. Army appreciates and rewards its soldiers for all the sacrifices they make and their selfless commitment to the Army and to the country. The Army enlistment benefits presentation is our way of educating the general public about the various perks the Army offers its soldiers and their dependents, even at a time when most other employers are cutting back on employee benefit schemes," says Larry Fowler of Army.net.

The slideshow on benefits succinctly discusses the various types of benefits Army soldiers receive. In addition their basic pay, soldiers also receive living allowances for food, clothing and housing. Army soldiers and their families also receive comprehensive health insurance and subsidized life insurance packages. Soldiers are also entitled to month long vacation times and several other monetary bonuses for specialized training or high demand jobs. In addition, Army jobs entitle personnel and their dependents to several everyday benefits such as daycare, legal services, financial service, discounted tickets and much more.

For students unsure of a career choice, the Army provides many college scholarships, helping students pursue higher education while being guaranteed a job upon graduating.

"Civilian jobs cannot provide many of the benefits the U.S. Army offers so when you weigh in the pros and cons of various career options, with its manifold benefits enlisting in the Army usually comes out with more pros than cons," concludes Fowler.
