June 10, 2010 (FPRC) --ST. PAUL, MINN. -- Skyline Exhibits, the leading provider of trade show exhibits, has announced the implementation of a certification process required for all members of Skyline Installation and Dismantle. Each member of the team is tested through three-phases of the training process.

These three phases ensure that every member of the Skyline I&D Team throughout the United States and Canada understand proper installation and dismantle techniques for trade show displays.

"Exhibiting at conferences can be difficult and ensuring that your booth is setup and dismantled properly is just another task to make your experience even more trying. Hiring Skyline to help you simplifies exhibiting. Our staff is equipped to help clients understand what booths will be best for the various locations while providing the best design and I&D services," said Michael Vekich, Executive Chairman of Skyline Exhibits (<http://www.skyline.com>).

The certification of each team member ensures that every client receives consistent, high quality service no matter which Skyline team they are partnering with. Fifteen Skyline locations to this point have been certified including some of the most popular locations for trade show events. Five more locations are currently undergoing the certification process.

"The great thing for us is that we can be sure that we are handing off our clients to a knowledgeable staff at their next event location. No matter where you are when you work with Skyline you will get the best service for your event," said Mike Mills, I&D Manager and Field Supervisor for Skyline Central Florida.
