July 30, 2010 (FPRC) -- Amsterdam City Tours reports a significant increase in the number of tourists from Southeast Asian booking sightseeing tours in Amsterdam. Company officials believe that the increased tourism is a measure of economic health throughout the continent.

Amsterdam City Tours' Southeast Asian tourists come from a variety of countries across the continent with an overwhelming majority from Malaysia and Singapore.

"As these two countries become more economically powerful, increasing numbers of citizens are finding international travel within their means. They choose Amsterdam because it is not terribly far from their home cities and tends to have excellent visitor services available for residents of Southeast Asia. In addition to Malaysia and Singapore, many tourists come from Indonesia, Vietnam, Thailand, China, and India," said Menno Jong, Director of Amsterdam City Tours.

Amsterdam City Tours has responded to the increase in travelers from Southeast Asia by increasing their Amsterdam sightseeing options, with plans to broaden the scope of its custom tour options even further. The company already offers customized Amsterdam sightseeing tours in several languages, and is developing additional tours in Thai, Mandarin, and other Southeast Asian languages.
