

Scientists Discuss Break Throughs in Electron Microscopy in Langkawi

DirectRooms.com reveals that leading scientists in the fields of electron microscopy will be heading to Langkawi in Malaysia to hear about new technology and practices being implemented as part of a major conference taking place on the island

November 11, 2010 (FPRC) -- The Scientific Conference of the Electron Microscopy Society of Malaysia is now in its 19th edition and will feature experts from the industry who will be presenting new techniques in microscopy. Advances in electron, optical and confocal applications will be on display along with new technological innovations.

The results of latest research findings will be showcased at the event as scientists, academics, government bodies and manufacturers of equipment share views and discuss the most recent developments to the field.

The programme of events will also cover important issues to material and life sciences as well as engineering along with what expectations are for the future. A micrograph competition will run throughout the event with prizes for the winners of the light and confocal microscopy categories.

Delegates attending the event from cheap Langkawi hotels will be convening at the Bayview Hotel in Langkawi, which will host the conference from 8th to 10th December 2010.

Lek Boonlert, marketing head at DirectRooms.com commented: 'Major scientific events such as this attract a large audience of attendees as it's a chance to hear the latest developments and break throughs from the industry. As attendees head to the island room availability will be limited so the need for early bookings is essential.'
