June 7, 2011 (FPRC) -- NEW YORK, NY -- Skyline New York, a leader in New York trade show displays, has added a brand new product to its lineup of exhibit installations and accessories. New large monitor stations are now available to Skyline New York customers.

Each large monitor station helps make multi-media tradeshow installations easier and more convenient for trade show professionals to set up and use. Designed for use with large screen monitors, the new stands can hold flat screen television monitors weighing up to 150 pounds. For smaller monitors, adapter plates are available to insure a secure fit. The stations also feature adjustable height settings and can be set at 65", 74" and 84" inches, depending on individual display needs at conventions or trade show exhibits New York.

"At Skyline New York we are always looking to add to our lineup of trade show displays and accessories. The new monitor stations are perfect for our customers who need a better way to display their multi-media and video presentations including commercials, demonstrations, and video testimonials. We think our clients will love how convenient it is to transport and install these stations at various trade show exhibits," says Judy Fairbanks of Skyline New York.

The monitor stations have a sleek, modern appearance that fits well with virtually any display design. The 65" models feature convenient casters that make the stands portable and easy to move, even for just one person. The modular construction enables each monitor station to be assembled in 10 minutes or less.

"We know our clients want the best exhibits, but they also want convenience and options. These large monitor stations are the best of both worlds featuring ease of use and flexibility. With adjustable height settings, vendors can make sure their multi-media displays are completely customized down to the last detail while attracting more visitors and demonstrating products or services on-screen," says Judy Fairbanks of Skyline New York.

In addition to these features, the station has a lockable, slide-out drawer that can be used to secure laptops, DVD players, or any other equipment required to deliver a multi-media presentation. The bottom of the drawer contains perforated holes for ventilation and cooling of important electronic equipment. All wires are concealed by the station's innovative design for a clean, professional appearance at any trade show stand New York.

In addition to trade display settings, the multi-purpose monitors can also be used in churches, schools, doctor's offices, public lobbies and more to display important information and announcements.
