

Baoting hosts huge water festival on 6 August 2011

DirectRooms.com announces that it's going to be virtually impossible to stay dry on a visit to China's Baoting County in August as the people organise a special weeklong water festival.

July 6, 2011 (FPRC) -- Voted as being among the best festivals in China, the 2011 Seven Fairies Hot Spring Water Fun Day will feature nonstop celebrations including live performances and appearances by celebrities. The main attraction for the event is the epic water fight where everyone playfully splashes each other and it seems that no one can escape untouched.

There will be some dry areas however and attendees can see displays of traditional singing, theatre and dance. Each year a parade makes its way through the city and should be seen for the sheer detail of the costumes and work that goes into the floats.

Other activities include sports matches, calligraphy competitions and a lively beauty contest in which Baoting's finest ladies will be parading the stage to vie for the 2011 crown.

The festival originally only lasted for a day but now is extended to a week as it aims to raise awareness and help preserve the forests within the province. Visitors looking to attend will need to book a hotel Haikou from 6th August 2011 when the festival starts although places are soon to become limited.

Lek Boonlert, marketing head at DirectRooms.com commented: 'Competition for rooms will be high as thousands of people come to join this immensely popular festival. Festival goers come from all over China and to avoid disappointment people should book early.'
