

Stradalli Cycle Announces its Newest Carbon Fiber Bicycle - The 2012 Stradalli Napoli

The new 2012 Stradalli Napoli is based on the proven performance and reliability of the Stradalli Trebisacce. The Napoli features a BB30 bottom bracket design and oversized tapered head tube for unsurpassed stiffness where it most matters.

October 27, 2011 (FPRC) -- Miami, Florida - Stradalli Cycle, the high performance carbon bicycle manufacturer, has announced the latest addition to its world class line of carbon fiber bicycles. The 2012 Stradalli Napoli is designed for the athlete who demands the most out of their equipment but doesn't want to spend a fortune on the best.

The Stradalli Napoli has recently been compared to the new 2012 Specialized Roubaix due to its increased ability to allow vertical deflection in the frame. This is the type of frame flex that provides increased shock absorption and vibration dampening. Since the BB30 bottom bracket design and tapered head tube maintain lateral stiffness, the new curvature found in the top tube and seat stay offer the best of both worlds when it comes to performance and comfort.

"The all new 2012 Stradalli Napoli is one of the lightest bikes we have announced this year," said Thomas Steinbacher of Stradalli. "It paves the way for all the new, great, and exciting things to come from Stradalli Cycle in 2012."

The new 2012 Napoli is made from the same 100% 3K carbon fiber found in Stradalli's most popular frames. With a tensile strength of 50 tons per square cm, and an exterior weave of 3000 weaves per crossing (3K), the Napoli is light, quick and yet comfortable.

Graeme Milburn of Tasmania, Australia, who has raised large amounts of money for cancer research over the last thirty years and received the "Order of Australia Medal" (OAM), from her Majesty Queen Elizabeth for 'Services to the Community', recently added the Napoli to his Stradalli collection.
