

Rocky Mountain Survival Introduces Custom Survival Kits

'These aren't commercial survival kits,' said Shettlesworth. 'They're the most thought out, practical and thoroughly tested tactical survival kits available.'

November 8, 2011 (FPRC) -- Monument, CO – One doesn't have to live in a disaster prone area to be prepared for an emergency. A wide variety of generic emergency preparedness kits are available, but they lack essential items needed for specific situations. Chris Shettlesworth and Dan Rivera, co-owners of Rocky Mountain Survival, have addressed that problem with a line of tactical survival kits specially designed to keep users alive and well.

'These aren't commercial survival kits,' said Shettlesworth. 'They're the most thought out, practical and thoroughly tested tactical survival kits available.'

Rocky Mountain Survival creates three levels of custom survival kits that can be used in emergencies. All kits have been extensively tested under exacting conditions, insuring they provide superior performance.

All kits are designed to accommodate additional food supplies and attachments can be added for extra pouches and storage. Users can personalize their survival kits with grooming needs, GPS units, batteries and a cell phone. Medication, a portable radio, glasses, animal and insect repellent, and sunscreen can be accommodated.

The stage 1 kit comes complete with a drop leg pouch that keeps it from interfering with packs, guns and accoutrements. The survival kit provides all the equipment necessary to address the need for food, water, shelter and first aid, along with a myriad of survival tools. The kit provides the needed items to start a fire, cook, purify water and obtain food. Contents also include tools for navigation, building a shelter and a military style flashlight to preserve night vision, along with the means to signal for help.

For those who need to vacate an area quickly, the stage 2 bug out kit contains all the tools and supplies found in the stage 1 kit, in addition to food and water, but without the drop leg bag. The comprehensive tactical kit also works well for outdoor enthusiasts and weighs just eight pounds.
