

Green Education Launches Sustainability Education Series for Business and Government

The Sustainability Education Series is comprised of a suite of 50 online, training modules providing information and directions for facilitating and developing key sustainability initiatives.

November 15, 2011 (FPRC) --Tampa, Florida; Green Education On Line who leads an effort in green education in the adult sectors, and who has taught green educational topics to 6,000+ is expanding to offer organizations the opportunity to offer green education to government employees and those who touch the workforce mindset. Kerry Mitchell who is the President says, "If we can educate employees in companies in government on topics such as water conservation, social responsibility, green building and waste management, they will understand the companies plan to become more energy efficient." The company offers the Sustainability Education Series, an extensive web based 13 course 50 module library for sustainability planning training in all departments on all levels.

Green Education On Line's on line catalog is designed for delivery to employees and affiliated organizations worldwide, the first of its kind. It is high quality and includes narration, graphics, and superior tests for knowledge. Many companies and Human Resource executives require certain methodologies for training and the series meets these requirements as the courses are SCORM compliant. Most companies insist employees take courses such as "sexual harassment in the workplace" or ADOBE or MICROSOFT training. There is a growing trend in companies to implement green best practices. Mitchell says, " Employees can buy-in more from getting the basics of green education as compliance for company policies." The company offers the opportunity to brand the offering Green Education On Line offerings.

Green Education On Line has target markets such as executives in government and business, and their employee. Their model offers "back-end" access for human resource departments with test scores, reporting for accountability.
