

Middle Class Scottish Set to Face Tough Year in 2012

Accountancy firm PFK has predicted that 2012 will be tough for many Scots and that the Middle Classes are expected to be caught out with financial difficulties, Trust Deed Scotland can reveal.

January 4, 2012 (FPRC) -- Accountancy firm PFK has predicted that 2012 will be tough for many Scots and that the Middle Classes are expected to be caught out with financial difficulties, Trust Deed Scotland can reveal.

In 2011 many ordinary Scots fell into a state of insolvency and that was partly due to the rises in the basic cost of living, the VAT increase and the onset of tough public spending cuts, plunging many into financial disarray.

Up and down the UK, vital services such as Citizens Advice Bureaux have been forced to close and with an ever growing number of people requiring help, there has been a squeeze on the availability of impartial and free debt help in Scotland.

One company who has helped residents of Scotland understand the severity of their debt problems and provided guidance of debt resolution techniques in Scotland, is the Scottish owned and operated Trust Deed Scotland.

As a company who have provided crucial advice to people in need of instant help, the experienced advisors have dealt with thousands of calls from people struggling with debt.

An advisor at the Scottish Debt Advice company with a head office in Glasgow said 'We speak to people from all walks of life. There is a growing misconception in Scottish society that only people living in places like Drumchapel, Easterhouse and Wester Hailes run up credit cards and get into debt but the reality is that the current debt epidemic is also affecting those from the suburbs such as Bearsden, Leith and Morningside.

This is a real Scottish problem, affecting the lives of real Scottish people.'

Speaking on the findings released by PFK, John Hall of insolvency body R3 commented 'Many Scots are in a situation where they simply cannot survive any longer. They are what we call 'zombie' debtors who can only pay the interest on their debts each month'

If you are struggling with debt and cannot afford to realistically repay your debts in Scotland, there is free and impartial help available from registered debt charities and you can also get instant free Scottish debt advice regardless of your income or level of debt from Trust Deed Scotland.
