

A Player's Life – We Have a Story to Tell

Real Players, Real Stories and the true life of Basketball Players

Washington, DC (FPRC) March 6, 2007 -- Are you missing out on all the "Inside Stuff" shows on TV? You love the game but do not have time to buy a paper and read about it in the sports column? And if you do find time to read a paper you do not find them informative or entertaining enough to hold your attention? Or do you think that not enough space is given to the game you love?

"A Player's Life - We Have a Story to Tell" is exactly what, you, basketball enthusiasts need in order to know everything about the game and the players who make the game. Stories, videos, interviews and sneak peaks...You name it, you got them. You can even write your stories about what you think about a player, about a game, a controversy, what you like, what you don't like... There are interview questions that you can fill and send to an email address given in the website. The photos in the gallery catch the players off-guard while on court and otherwise. Some of the most elegant action on court that you might miss while watching live will not be lost to time. The videos feature the players as normal human beings whose lives have been married to basketball. It is not only the NDA players who can be seen but also high school players and college players. No one who loves the game is left out.

The website has partnered with <http://www.basketball-connect.com/> so as to provide you with more stories. The two websites together provide you the most comprehensive coverage of the game while keeping it alive.

Sylita Thomas has done it again. The founder and owner of www.basketball-connect.com, a website that is dedicated to the game has come out with another website A Players Life (www.aplayerslife.com). Sylita Thomas is also the president of a company called MySportFolios LLC. A premier service of the company is to provide professional basketball contacts.

A Player's Life proclaims that it has a story to tell. Stories, videos, interviews, sneak peaks into the lives of the players, and podcasts aid in giving more insight into the game. Viewers can write their own stories and post them on the site. Some of the featured players on the site are Anthony Doyley Jr, Mike Speranza, Morrissa "Mo" Benberry, and Femi Babayemi.

There is a photo gallery featuring the players on the court and outside it. Players are caught in a pensive mood, in a playful mood, smiling, smirking and frowning. Videos of the normal lives of the players as they go about their daily duties are broadcasted on the website.

Not only have the professional basketball players found a place but also high school, college and other amateur players. Questions like where they are from, how old they are, where they hail from, and who inspired them to play the game are asked and answered by the players.

Basketball Connect and A Player's life together provide a most comprehensive coverage of the game.
