

Twitter Contest: Retweet and Win Press Release Writing/Distributions in March on Whyte-HallCommunications

Retweet Whyte-HallCommunications tweets to win free online press release writing and distributions worth US$250 (USD) each.

March 1, 2010 (FPRC) -- There's never been a better time to follow the Jamaican internet-based publicity-marketing consultancy Whyte-HallCommunications on Twitter.

In addition to PR tips, discounts and specials and using direct messages to answer questions about publicity-marketing and press release writing and distribution, Whyte-HallCommunications (<http://www.whytehallcommunications.webs.com>) announced today that it is giving away free online press release writing and distributions via Twitter twice a week, every week, during March.

To be eligible to win an online press release writing and distribution, simply follow @ThePRwriter on Twitter and then retweet a Whyte-HallCommunications tweet - any tweet (<http://www.twitter.com/theprwriter>). And with that you're entered to win an online press release writing and distribution worth $250 (USD).

'The more often you retweet a Whyte-HallCommunications message, the greater your chances of winning,' says Delroy A. Whyte-Hall, President/CEO of Publicity & News at Whyte-HallCommunications. 'We hope to expose more businesses to our press release writing and distribution consultancy and this is a fun way to do that.'

Created by a multi-award winning journalist, Whyte-HallCommunications is a Jamaican internet-based publicity and social media marketing consultancy that helps small business owners (professionals, consultants, entrepreneurs) boost sales, build credibility, and create a powerful presence using low-cost, high impact publicity and social media methods.

'Our goal is to generate some excitement about Whyte-HallCommunications and to let businesses know how press release writing and distribution using our services can offer a big boost to any marketing campaign,' says Whyte-Hall
