November 11, 2011 (FPRC) -- NAPERVILLE, IL -- Awards and Fine Gifts, a Chicago based company that provides businesses across the country with executive gift ideas, recently commemorated its silver anniversary.

To celebrate the occasion, owner and founder John W. Robbins is drawing attention to how other businesses can help their own local communities. Robbins believes in leading by example and therefore frequently donates his time to a number of local charities. These charities include the Boys and Girls Club of Chicago, the Big Brother Big Sister Program of DuPage County and Ronald McDonald's House Charities. He is also a member of the Naperville Area Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club of Naperville.

"Every person has some special way of contributing to their communities. I also believe that corporations should give, as we would receive, happily and optimistically, quickly and without hesitation. Through Awards and Fine Gifts, we've donated a number of recognition awards to nonprofit groups, helped design donor walls for Fortune 500 companies and donated fine crystal and other gifts to charities for their silent auctions. It's something that we think is important and we're happy to play a small role in the success of these organizations and charities," said Robbins, owner and founder of Awards and Fine Gifts.

Through its corporate executive gifts, Awards and Fine Gifts wants to help recognize the success of others. The company is widely known and respected throughout the industry and the local area for maintaining an immaculate reputation. Awards and Fine Gifts offers customers a number of executive gifts, including engraved crystal awards, crystal frames, engraved or imprinted pens, plaques, clocks, watches and more. Many of the products can be engraved, which allows companies to provide employees with a personal token of appreciation that can be displayed and treasured for years to come.

"We believe everyone should be recognized for a job well done and think it's incredibly important to say thank you in a tangible way. Whether our customers are looking for tokens of appreciation for their employees or their own customers, we can help them find a great looking gift that fits within their budget. In this corporate economy, many employees are doing more with fewer resources than ever before. A desk clock, crystal award or even a simple framed certificate are all great ways to say thanks for a job well done. If you're interested in saying thank you, but aren't quite sure how, let us help," said Robbins.
