

My Blender Publishes New Guide To The Best Blenders Available in 2016

MyBlender.org has updated its homepage with a comprehensive guide to the best blenders available on the market right now, helping people set up for a healthier year in 2016.

February 1, 2016 (FPRC) -- Blenders are a great way of breaking down foods that are rich in nutrients and making them easy to ingest, as well as being a unique and novel way to mix ingredients to create drinks, sauces, soups and more. With January almost over, many people are looking at this as the last chance to start strong on their health kick, and a blender can help them deliver on that. My Blender has now updated its homepage with the best releases into the market, so individuals can buy right and buy once from a special shortlist of the best blenders available so far in 2016.

The guide, MyBlender.org - 2016 Blender Recommendations, includes an introduction to the uses and opportunities a good blender provides, followed by a buying guide that covers the key elements individuals should be looking for and prioritizing. The guide then helps people choose their own priorities and pick from one of many resources, with a guide to the best brands and a breakdown of the best blenders for specific purposes, from smoothies and margaritas to the best below a hundred dollars.

The review then concludes with words of wisdom from the site's editors, who encourages individuals to read the reviews thoroughly and use the information in the guide to evaluate for themselves what they feel the best product will be for their needs, with contenders from Kitchenaid, Cuisnart, Blendtec, Vitamix and more.

A spokesperson for My Blender explained, "We have created a guide that will help people buy the best blender for their needs in 2016. The year is young, but already some big releases have come out that make attractive offerings in the broader market, and may well be exactly what some people have been looking for all along. That said, we will regularly update our guide as the year goes on, so passionate foodies should bookmark our page and check back regularly for updates."
