

Edison Tree Removal Experts Urge Use of Professionals for Tree Removal

Tree removal is a dangerous job and one that is best suited for experts. Undertaking the job of removing a tree should always be done by an expert with the correct equipment. Trees can fall any time of year and should be closely inspected for health and stability in order to maintain a safe environment for you, your family, and your property.

April 2, 2019 (FPRC) -- Throughout any given year or season nature does its thing and trees are no exception to the cycle of life. They're a vital part of our lives, increasing the amount of oxygen in our air, providing homes for creatures of all kinds, and sheltering us from the sun's heat in the dead of summer.

But when that tree falls or begins to die, removing it can be a dangerous task. Even what appear to be smaller limbs carry a lot of weight and can do harm to anyone underneath them if they fall.

Tree removal expert, Chip McDougal, states, "Tree trimming, let alone tree removal, is listed as one of the most dangerous things a person can do. Every year thousands of accidents, and many deaths, occur when untrained people attempt to trim or cut trees on their property."

McDougal advises, "Hire a qualified tree expert to examine the trees in your yard to determine which branches are weak or dying that could potentially fall. A trained expert can also determine if trunk or root damage is being caused by dead branches."

If you know a tree is in danger of falling call an expert immediately and section off the area with police tape or string with hanging warning signs. Things to look out for include soft soil and heaving soil at the base of the tree, along with leaning of the tree trunk itself.

A visual inspection of the tree can also alert you to rotting and broken branches and limbs in the canopy of the tree. When near a tree that may be in danger of falling, be alert to sounds of cracking.

"It is always better to err on the safe side when dealing with mother nature," McDougal warns, "Call a tree removal company that has the experience and knowledge to create a safer environment for you, your family, your business and your property."
